All the while his wife's ongue rattled with joy at his return; and al though he assumed a carcless, happy demeanor he was ill at ease. In one short minute, he had decided what to do in regard to pin and eravat-Blowing out the light, he secored the fixtures on the stand, concealed them in the pocket of his cost, and retired to rest.

The next morning Mr. B. was decked in a drange cravat. Although he was positive that it was noticed at the breakfast table, and that his wife's eye quailed beneath his gaze, he made so remark calculated to call attention to the atter. He had the "key" to a painful mystery, and he would leave it to time and circumstances o unravel it, and take the consequences !

After breakfast Mr. B. went to his store On he way he was greeted by several acquaintances, and he noticed that each one "started" on notice ing his cravet! The mystery was being unlock ed. Just before dinner time, a friend called to see him on business connected with the church ; for a while the conversation was strictly on the subject; but at length the friend observed-What on earth are you doing with S's pin and cravat!"

Our hero did not fly into an uncontrollable asion, nor demand the proof of the charge delicately made. He simply asked his friend one change, making money matters very tight why he thought the pin belonged to the individual named? His visitor was familiar with the owner; had remarked the pin a hundred times; it was an odd one, and there was not such another in the place ; besides he had part will give us a handsome victory in our fall night, where a little party of gentlemen and met for transacting business, and he were that

The entertainment of the Campbells at Armory Hall, last night, was largely attended.—
Indeed the Hall was full, more being in attendance than could find seam; and for the performances we are pleased to say that, although expecting to find something very fine from the encomiums of the press and personal assurances, our expectations were more than realized.—
The gentlemen composing the troupe are not mere singers or performers of local reputation, but each one is a superior artiste, whose execution cannot fail to please the lover of good music, albeit, he be a connoisour.

The entertainment of this troups also have The entertainment of this troupe, also has a distinguishing character from most Negro per formances, that is, the absence of broad allu stons, and low vulgarities, which diagust the refined listener. Therefore a gentleman may take his wife, daughters, or any companion without fear of having a blush called upon their check.
